About the Conference:

This event is the first time that ASEEEES and CESS hold a combined conference, and is the first time that ASEEEES holds a conference in the region (the ASEEEES conferences held annually since 1970 have been in the USA or Canada). This is the fourth regional conference of CESS, and by far the largest.

ASEEEES - Association for Slavic, East European and Eurasian Studies

<http://www.aseees.org>

ASEEEES was established in 1948 at the same time as area studies research was getting started in the West, and particularly to study the Soviet Union. Until 2008, the association was called American Association for the Advancement of Slavic Studies (AAASS). After the break-up of the Soviet Union and the decline in interest in Russia and Eastern Europe, ASEEEES has made a priority to increase its focus on regions such as Central Asia and the Caucasus. The decision to hold this regional conference reflects ASEEEES's interest in building its network and membership in the region.

CESS - Central Eurasian Studies Society

<http://centraleurasia.org>

CESS was established in 2000, at a time when the study of Central Asia/Eurasia was on the rise. The founding of CESS was a response to a general institutional neglect of the region. With a large number of young scholars pushing to bring Central Asian/Eurasian studies into the mainstream of scholarship, CESS's constituency rapidly. CESS was first established at Harvard University under the leadership of John Schoeberlein, on the basis of the Program on Central Asia and the Caucasus, of which he was director. CESS's membership in the region has been a major priority, and its first biennial regional conference was in Kyrgyzstan in 2008, followed by Ankara, Tbilisi and now Astana.

This joint regional conference reflects a change of approaches and generations, with a general shift away from Moscow-centric approaches. It reflects important new trends: mutual recognition rather than competition for importance between scholars of Eurasia and the previously dominant regions, and the reorientation of area studies of the region toward closer integration of theoretical agendas grounded in the academic disciplines with empirically-oriented research rooted in a deep knowledge of and appreciation of regions such as Kazakhstan and its neighbors.

Nazarbayev University

<http://www.nu.edu.kz>

The institutional development of Nazarbayev University began in 2009 with the establishment of a non-profit joint stock company "New University of Astana". In 2010, the first group of students were admitted to the Foundation Program and in 2015, NU will have its first graduates. The university seeks to produce research and education of a quality comparable with respected universities globally.

Center for Eurasian Regional Studies, School of Humanities and Social Sciences

<http://shss.nu.edu.kz/shss/Research/CERS>

In 2012, NU began to build its strength in scholarship on the Eurasian region of which Kazakhstan is at the core. The Center for Eurasian Regional Studies was designated as the host for the ASEEEES-CESS Joint Regional Conference in 2013, and has organized the conference with support NU as a whole and with involvement of scholars across the university.

Conference Acknowledgements:

The conference organizers are grateful for the substantial in-kind support provided to the conference by Nazarbayev University, and to ASEEEES and CESS for investing their trust in this undertaking — in many ways an undertaking filled with unknowns — and for their support along the way. Particular gratitude is due to Alibek Abdullayev for his resourcefulness and persistence in solving problems, to Gaukhar Nurseitova in the NU Communications Dept. and Zukhra Pirnazarova at IndigoPrint for their work on the program under difficult circumstances, and to Assel Sydykova in USM for work on financial administration. We are also very grateful to the staff of the School of Humanities and Social Sciences and of the International Scholars and Students Department, together with student volunteers from across NU who have sustained the effort.

“Towards a Maximally Inclusive Concept of Eurasia”

Professor Chris Hann (Max Planck Institute for Social Anthropology, Germany)

Time: Thursday, May 22; 17:30-18:45

Location: Block 5, Room 5.103

Synopsis:

Eurasia can be defined territorially in a variety of ways, ranging from restricted zones of Central (or Inner) Asia to the whole of Asia, plus Europe, plus North Africa. The latter, expansive definition is warranted by the substantial measure of unity which developed across this landmass following the urban revolutions of the Bronze Age. Scholarship has privileged the civilizational innovations of the Center-South, and analysed alternating leadership between East and West. But with Europe in decline and the great traditions of the East and South on the rise, openings may soon appear for the North-Center to broker a world-historical compromise. Until this becomes politically realistic, Eurasia is best considered detached from territory altogether — as an inclusive, unified mental space.

“For an Engaged Knowledge: On the Relevance of Marxism for the Studies of Post-Socialist Cultures”

Professor Almira Ousmanova (European Humanities University)

Time: Friday, May 23; 18:15-19:30

Location: Block 5, Room 5.103

Synopsis:

Marxism is, undoubtedly, in vogue again. But, leaving aside the issue of its growing political importance on a global scale, one could pose the question — in which forms and with what implications Marxist theory (cultural Marxism included) can be relevant for the studies of Post/socialist history and culture?

The degeneration of Marxism into dogma during late socialism seriously affected the fate of this theory in the Postsoviet period. After the collapse of the Soviet Union, it became part of intellectual history, but ceased to be perceived as a living tradition, which would have an emancipatory potential, conceptual depth and methodological legitimacy. Soviet Marxism was heavily compromised not only by the guardians of ideological orthodoxy, but in addition to that, it has been “convicted” for the entire experience of “real socialism” (along with the political repressions and economic failures of the “society of labor”). Yet the history of Western Marxism is living proof of its viability: throughout the entire 20th century, Marxist theoreticians (from A. Gramsci, W. Benjamin and T. W. Adorno to F. Jameson, A. Badiu, S. Hall, S. Buck-Morss, S. Žižek and many others) have been contributing to the development of new categories of socio-critical analysis that are now widely used in various disciplines.

How do we work with these ideas and approaches when it comes to the interpretation of our own past? How do we think and what kind of research questions do we formulate in relation to Soviet modernization, “national” question, women’s emancipation, orientalism and colonization, everyday life or visual culture? I would argue, that Marxist theory (in both Soviet and Western versions) is important also as a discursive ‘code of access’ for studies of Soviet past: it does help to understand better the conceptual foundations of the socialist project, and its utopian substratum, as well as its material incarnations.

Pondering to what extent our research agenda is driven by the ‘ideologies’ of theories that we apply, I also propose to discuss the issue of the “engaged knowledge” as a mode of theoretical positioning, emotional involvement and political reflexivity, which are of particular importance for the current historical moment.
